During this period of our evolution as a nation, moral education was deep in the very fabric of our schools. There was, however, something else in the fabric of moral education that caused it to become problematic: religion. In the United States, as a group of colonies and later as a new nation, the overwhelming dominant religion was Protestantism.

The question should be: why do middle-aged Japanese men like teenage girls ? It is a universal feature of human sexuality for men to be attracted in young and good-looking women, because they are supposedly more fertile. It's ingrained in our instincts, and only moral education can try to repress this instinct.
