The vast majority of pottery used in Britain was imported. Then the Romans arrived and the demand for pottery escalated to an astronomic level. The Romans brought their own craftsmen, but the demand was still too high for them to cope with. Importing pottery for the Roman army was expensive.

Romans in Britain - Romano-British Pottery

Prehistoric and Roman pottery: a brief summary. In Britain, pottery was made from the Neolithic (New Stone Age) period onwards, although some parts of the British Isles were aceramic (did not produce pottery) at various points in time. Prehistoric pottery is handmade (i.e. not wheel-turned).

Pottery in archaeology - Spoilheap Archaeology

Pottery was produced in enormous quantities in ancient Rome, mostly for utilitarian purposes. It is found all over the former Roman Empire and beyond. Monte Testaccio is a huge waste mound in Rome made almost entirely of broken amphorae used for transporting and storing liquids and other products – in this case probably mostly Spanish olive oil, which was landed nearby, and was the main fuel for lighting, as well as its use in the kitchen and washing in the baths. It is usual to divide ...
